San Bernardino Success Stories - Phone Bust

San Francisco, California

When the 28-year-old financial analyst left her phone in the car with her husband while she ran into the grocery store, he read an incoming message from a man she had met at a party on the previous weekend. While the message itself wasn't all that incriminating, he then went through a deleted items folder she didn't know existed and found the more racy ones. The phone was turned over to our investigators and within hours they had enough evidence to confront the cheating spouse.

San Bernardino Success Stories - Poor Executive Decision

Sacramento, California

The business executive didn't know he was being watched. The guy at the cigarette stand across the street wasn't a merchant. He was a private investigator who had been hired by the executive's wife because she suspected he was seeing another woman. Her instincts were right. The executive was headed to a rendezvous with another woman. The private eyes obtained what they had been waiting hours for: a glimpse of the two entering the woman's apartment around midnight. The detectives took pictures with a cell phone and delivered the evidence to our client.

San Bernardino Success Stories - Someone's at the Door!

San Jose, California

A California attorney was having a difficult time locating an elusive "dead beat" dad. The phone numbers had been disconnected and a PO Box was the only published address. Our resourceful process server located his girlfriend's apartment, waited for the "dad" to appear and posing as a pizza delivery man, successfully served something other than pizza, much to everyone's surprise and our client's delight.

San Bernardino Success Stories - Locating a Former Employee

Santa Clara, California

An Orange County law firm handling a business-to-business litigation case, needed to locate the whereabouts of an ex-employee of the defendant. We were supplied only with a name. Our skilled investigators located the individual. Based on our efforts, our client interviewed the ex-employee and obtained a positive outcome in their litigation matter.

San Bernardino Success Stories - My Aching Back

Houston, Texas

A San Diego based insurance company received a claim from their policyholder. The claim involved an employee who allegedly slipped and fell at work, injuring his back. The employer received numerous complaints from co-workers indicating that the subject was not injured, and was busy with other activities. We were asked to verify this information. Our skilled investigators obtained detailed videotape of the subject lifting furniture, playing basketball, and jogging. As a result of our efforts, our client denied the employee's benefits, and the case was settled for no monetary value.

San Bernardino Success Stories - Jobless or Not?

Los Angeles, California

A Los Angeles law firm representing a woman in an attempt to collect her back child support, contacted us, as the ex-husband claimed that he was unemployed and unable to pay his child support. Our skilled investigators utilized numerous techniques, including surveillance, to document that the ex-husband was currently employed with a large engineering firm, and verified that he was earning approximately $100,000 annually.
